Design Students Wanted

Media and Public Communications Office of the California Energy Commission are looking for graphic design majors for student assistant positions to help on the Commission's print publications and websites.

These are paid positions.

Successful applicants must be able to independently generate ideas, move a project forward from conception to production, implement art direction, and maintain deadlines for multiple projects.

The positions require an understanding of page layout, hierarchy, and typography, as well as skill in Adobe Creative Suite programs, such as Photoshop, Illustrator, and InDesign. Skill with HTML, CSS, and After Effects is a big plus.

Students should be able to work part-time on a schedule that would be compatible with their classes. Full-time work is available during both semester and summer/winter breaks.

Students are hired and paid throughout the CSUS University Enterprises Inc. (UEI), but students work at the Energy Commission under contract with UEI. Salaries range up to $11.46 per hour based on number of units completed and experience. You must be enrolled for at least six units of college-level classes and meet UEI requirements to be considered.
